CHAMPION'S CONFESSION

Calloway County Night Rider Turns State's Evidence.

TOOK BLOODY OATH.

Implicated Fifteen Men Not Already Under Arrest.

Murray, Ky., April 13.—Though built by careful hands and concealed under oaths of blood and pillage, the castle of the night riders is tumbling down in the Purchase. In the scenes played here today in the circuit court room could be seen the handwriting on the wall, which says that the night rider will be gone forever, and a score of farmers will be in prison before the law has finished its slow but certain work.

Beside the instructions to the grand jury today, which dealt verbally with the subject and declared for order and the enforcement of law, the confession of a member of the band who whipped Al Perry was a feature.

How He Joined.

Maeon Champion is the man who made it, and it is in full as follows: "The affiant, Maeon Champion, says that a few days before the raid on Al Perry I was at D. L. Thomas' store,—called me out and said: 'Let's join the night riders. There is a whole lot of fun attached to it.' He said that they were working on the road right below the store, and follow him down there; that he could put himself in and me, too.

"Then we all went down to the lane toward Buffalo, and—said that he would get over into the fence corner and get the man out to take us in,—told me to get down on my right knee, and got down, and he got down. He told me to hold up my right hand, and he took a piece of paper out of his coat pocket and read the oath to me. I cannot repeat the oath.

Would Behead Him.

"After giving the oath, which was to the effect that if I gave it away I would be killed, and ended 'so help me God,' he said to me if you do not understand the oath it means this:—If you ever tell it that a clique of them would take my head."

Here he mentioned a number of

HERE'S A WAY TO SAVE DOCTOR BILLS.

Physicians Give Free Advice by Which Parents May Profit.

It's a matter of general interest just now how one's physical condition can be got into shape to best receive the benefits of the summer season. Especially is this true of the children. They have become run down by the winter of unnatural manner of living because of ill-considered food and much time spent indoors. Spring comes with its sunshine, its fresh vegetables and all else invigorating, but the children are in no condition to receive nature's remedies.

Many parents call in the family physician. Many other parents take advantage of what the physician told them when he was first called in consultation. All good family physicians say: "Give the children Castoria." Healthy parents know this as children. It was more than thirty years ago that Castoria made a place for itself in the household. It bore the signature of Charles H. Fletcher then, as it does to-day. The signature is its guarantee, which is accepted in thousands of homes where there are children.

Much is printed nowadays about big families. Dr. William J. McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., is the father of one of these much-read-about families. Here is what he says:

"As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about the great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have, in my years of practice, found Castoria a popular, and the party a candidate who, if nominated, can carry more states than any other living Democrat, and who would be practically certain of election. Rebellious against the doctrine of despair, we take it for granted that there is no necessity for the ravens of defeat to perch on the banners of Democracy in 1908, simply because they did in 1896, 1900 and 1904.

Conditions industrially, financially, and politically are such that we have this year the opportunity of a general election to win the presidency.

If you and the country will but respond to the invitation and the opportunity extended to you by the Democrats of Minnesota, we can escape from the blighting tradition of defeat and rehabilitate the party and the nation by a great political victory next November.

There is still ample time to see that enough delegates are elected to the Denver convention to make this deliberative Democratic body that will give the party new hope and new inspiration and a winning candidate. To this end, we solicit your co-operation and will heartily welcome and consider any suggestions you may offer.

Let Us Try to Win.

PLANS FOR ENTERTAINING

At Annual Reunion of Confederate Veterans in Birmingham.

MUSIC A FEATURE.

Number of Entertainments Planned for the Pleasure of the Veterans.

(BY JAS. B. KEELING.)

Birmingham, Ala., April 13.—Few people realize the immensity of the task of preparing for the annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans. For three months the work of preparation has been going on, increasing in size every day, while nearly the same length of time intervenes between now and the holding of the reunion in Birmingham next June.

Birmingham's civic pride is being exemplified in the manner of her preparation for this great event. Solid, sturdy business men with heavy business cases upon them are devoting hours of their time to the making of the re-union a success. It is safe to say that it would be impossible to contract with any of them to devote the same amount of time to an ordinary business proposition for a salary of less than several hundred dollars per month. And yet the many committees, and especially the executive and finance committees, have been holding meetings two or three afternoons a week for the last eight weeks planning for the best way of entertaining the old fighters, and it rarely happens that a member of the committee is absent.

The first thing, that which is regarded above all others, is the care and comfort of the veterans. This is to come first and the entertainment of the sponsors and other social affairs afterward. Nothing will be left undone to make the heroes of '61-65 feel happy and contented while they are Birmingham's guests.

There will be thousands of them, but Birmingham will be equal to the occasion. To those who do not feel able to pay for their lodging and Board, special attention will be paid. One of the largest buildings at the fair grounds will be converted into a hotel for their accommodation. This hotel will bear the name of John B. Gordon.

Several thousand cots will be placed in the building and the only request made of the veterans is that they bring blankets. Accommodations of all kinds will be supplied, while everything palatable in the eating line will be provided. Huge kitchens will be fitted up, while expert barbecue cooks will be kept steadily at work from the time the reunion begins until the finish.

There will be no limit either as to the amount of food. A veteran may eat once, twice or a dozen times a day if he wishes, as the dining room will be open all day.

The Hippodrome Skating Auditorium will be used as a convention hall. The acoustics of this building are very good and the seating capacity will accommodate more than 3,000. The grand ball will also be given in the Hippodrome. From the fair grounds to the Hippodrome is a ride of only 12 minutes.

General headquarters for the assignment of rooms and other work of the reunion will be in the City Hall, while the different generals will establish separate headquarters for their commands. Reservations for headquarters are being made right along, among those being Gen. Stephen D. Lee and Gen. William E. McKie, who have reservations at the Hotel Hillman, while General Tyler has reserved headquarters at the New Morris Hotel for himself and the surviving members of Forrest's Cavalry. Requests for reservations are being received daily. Regimental reunions will be held in Capital Park, its six acres of beautiful lawn and closeness to the heart of town making it an ideal place for such occasions. It is only five blocks from the corner of Second avenue and Twentieth street, the business center of town, and seven blocks from the Hippodrome Skating Auditorium, the convention hall.

There will be a number of entertainments for the pleasure of the veterans. The customary ball will be held in the Hippodrome, while at least two concerts at night are being arranged for. Special entertainment will also be provided at the fair grounds at night for the veterans registered at the Fair Grounds Hotel, while at least one afternoon's entertainment in the shape of races and other open air contests will be given.

A feature of the reunion will be the music, it will be plentiful, especially in the convention hall. Philip Memoli has been appointed general director of all music and will have a number of bands under his charge. The executive committee is in communication with several noted bandmasters in regard to bringing their bands to the reunion.

In connection with the music, the festival to be given by Ames' Band in Birmingham during May, the proceeds of which are to go to the reunion fund, will be one of the many entertainments which Birmingham people can take advantage of on account of the reunion being held here this year.

The vocal music will play a prominent part. An adult chorus of several hundred voices will take part in the program, while the children's chorus will furnish one of the most inspiring parts of the reunion. A program is being arranged for them and practice will be started in a short while among the students of the public schools. Several thousand school children will be grouped together in the grand chorus.

DIRE DISTRESS

It Is Near at Hand to Hundreds of Hopkinsville Readers.

Don't neglect an aching back. Backache is the kidneys' cry for help.

Neglect hurrying to their aid Means that urinary troubles follow quickly.

Dire distress, diabetes, Bright's disease.

M. G. Long, farmer, one of the best known residents of the county, who lives on the large farm which he owns, on the Franklin road, one and a half miles east of Russellville, Ky., says: "I had marked symptoms of kidney ailment, particularly in connection with the kidney secretions which at times were most irregular and distressing. Once and a while I would feel a heavy, dull aching across the small of my back, always more severe after an over exertion. My attention was attracted to Doan's Kidney Pills by advertisements in the papers and the statements made by people who had tried them led me to believe that they could be depended upon. I procured a box and before I had used the contents there was a vast improvement in my condition, enough to prove to my satisfaction that Doan's Kidney Pills are fine for kidney and bladder troubles."

HOPKINSVILLE APPLIES

For a Date With The Tuberculosis Exhibition.

Nashville, Tenn., April 14.—Applications for holding the American Tuberculosis Exhibition continue to reach the temporary headquarters in this city. Practically every sizeable city in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama has presented its claims for exhibition. Those applications are being considered at the National headquarters in New York City, although there are not enough months in the year to take care of near all of them.

The latest applicant is Hopkinsville, Kentucky, which is represented in the correspondence by Mr. R.
L. Woodard, who has asked Mr. N.
N. Cullen of Nashville to intercede for him. It is expected that fuller announcement of the itinerary of the Exhibition in these three states will be made within a few days.

The exhibit will be located in Alabama cities during April and May.
The Exhibit has been shown in the leading cities of Canada, Mexico and the United States, with the holding of hundreds of meetings, an attendance of 500,000, the publication of thousands of columns in the newspapers, and the distribution of several million pieces of printed matter.

The Exhibit

Consists of charts, maps, models of tents and buildings, photographs and pictures showing causes leading to consumption, demonstration of living in the open, etc., and several hundred slides used with the addresses given a number of times each day and night. There is nothing disagreeable or dangerous; no patients treated; no remedies sold or advertised; no promotion of any commercial or private interest.

The Purpose

Is to show the means of prevention and cure, and to secure a far-reaching press and platform propaganda against this preventable and curable disease.

more tobacco this season than any season heretofore, much of it being received from other counties. He has not knowingly bought a pound of tobacco in violation of association pledges. The big factory on Second street will shut down after this week and not re-open for probably six months. The Regie house of the Tandy & Fairleigh Co. is also closing up the season's work this week. After the fire of December 7, the Company re-opened business in two factories, but one was closed down March 18 and the remaining one has handled the usual amount of tobacco on hand at this season. The close comes a little earlier than usual, the season generally ending about May one.

still running as it uses much associa-is the association's best customer.

Therefore she travels incognito in her realm, meeting adventures strange and full of excitement. You will learn with pardonable pride that the American blood in her veins gives her an independence unheard of in the presence of kings, but most of all you will want to know how she succeeds in her bold undertaking. That you will enjoy every minute of the reading is assured by the verdict of thousands who declare "The Princess Virginia" to be a most delightful story.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

RON HEART was dressed in the long double breasted gray overcoat and the soft gray hat in which all snapshot photographs (no others had ever been taken) showed the chancellor of Rheata.

At sight of the emperor off came the famous hat, bristling with hair of curiously mingled black and white.

"Good day, your majesty," he said, with no sign of surprise in his voice or face.

"The train rocked going around a curve, and it was with difficulty that the chancellor kept his footing. But he stood rightly erect, supporting himself in the doorway until the emperor, with more politeness than enthusiasm, invited him to enter and be seated.

"I'm glad you're old enough to travel, chancellor," said Leopold. "We had some too encouraging an account of you from Captain von Breitslein."

"I travel because you travel, your majesty," replied the old man. "It is kind of you to tolerate me here, and I appreciate it."

Now they sat facing each other, and the young man, fighting down a sense of guilt, familiar to him in boyish days when about to be taken to task by the chancellor, gazed fixedly at the hard, clever face on which the afternoon sun scored the detail of each wrinkle.

"Indeed!" was the emperor's only answer.

"Your majesty, I have served you and your father before you well, I hope—faithfully, I know. I think you trust me."

"No man more. But this sounds a portentous preface. Is it possible you "Good day, your majesty," he said. Imagine it necessary to "lead up to a subject if I can please myself by doing you a favor?"

"If I have seemed to lead up to what I wish to say, your majesty, it is only for the sake of explanation. You are wondering, no doubt, how I knew you would travel today and in this train, and why I have ventured to follow. Your intention I learned by accident."

The chancellor did not explain by what diplomacy that "accident" had been brought about. "Wishing much to talk over with you a pressing matter that should not be delayed, I took this liberty and seized this opportunity."

"Some men would in my place pretend that business of their own had brought them and that the train had been chosen by chance. But your majesty knows me as a blunt man when I serve him not as diplomat, but as friend. I'm not one to work in the dark with those who trust me, and I want your majesty to know the truth."

"CASTORIA." The kind you have always thought of as the best.

It is the only one that is so good for you. It is the only one that is so good for you. It is the only one that is so good for you.

"CASTORIA." The kind you have always thought of as the best.

(Which perhaps he did, but not the whole truth.)

"Your raise my curiosity," said Leopold.

"There have I your indifference to speak frankly and candidly as a humble subject to his emperor, but as an old man to a young man."

"I'd have you speak as a friend," said Leopold. But a slight constriction hardened his face as he prepared himself for something disagreeable.

"I've had a letter from the crown prince of Hungary. It was couched in such a way that there is a certain reason for your majesty's delay in following up the first overtures for an alliance with his family. Malicious tongues have whispered that your majesty's attentions are otherwise engaged, and the young Adalbert has addressed me in a friendly way, begging that the rumor may be contradicted or confirmed."

"I'm not sure that negotiations had gone far enough to give him the right to be inquisitive," returned Leopold, frowning.

The chancellor spread out his old veined hands in a gesture of appeal. "I fear," he said, "that in my anxiety for your majesty's welfare and the good of Rheata I may have exceeded my instructions. My only excuse is that I believed your mind to be definitely made up. I still believe it to be so. I would listen to no one who should try to persuade me of the contrary, and I will write Adalbert."

"You must get yourself and me out of the scene as best you can, since you admit you got us into it," broke in the emperor, with an uneasy laugh.

"If Princess Virginia of Baumenburg-Drippe is as charming as she is said to be, her difficulty will be in choosing a husband, not in getting one. For once, my dear chancellor, gossip has told the truth, and I wouldn't say the princess so poor a compliment as to ask for her hand when I've no heart left to give her in exchange for it. There's some one else."

"It is of that some one else I would venture to speak, your majesty. Gossip has named her. May I?"

"I'll save you the trouble, for I'm not ashamed that the common fate has overtaken me—common because every man loves once before he dies, and yet uncommon because no man ever loved a woman so worthy. Chancellor, there's no woman in the world like Miss Helen Mowbray, the lady to whom I owe my life."

"Your natural you should be grateful, your majesty, but—"

"It's natural I should be in love."

"Natural that a young man inexperienced in affairs of the heart should mistake warm gratitude for love, impossible that the mistake should be allowed to continue."

Leopold's eyes grew dark. "In such a connection," he said, "it would be better not to mention the word 'mistake.' I'm glad you are here, for now you can learn from me my intention toward that girl."

"Intentions, did you say, your majesty? I fear I grow hard of hearing."

"At least you will never grow slow of understanding. You did speak of my intentions toward Miss Mowbray."

"You would give the lady some magnificent estate, some splendid acknowledgment."

"Whether splendid or not would be a matter of opinion," laughed the emperor. "I shall offer her a present of myself."

The old man had been sitting with his chin sunk into his short neck, peering out from under his brows in a way he had, but he lifted his head suddenly, with a look in his eyes like that of an animal who senses danger from an unexpected quarter.

"Your majesty," he exclaimed, "you are your father's son, you are Rheata, and you stand of honor."

"I hope to marry Miss Mowbray," Leopold cut him short.

The chancellor's jaw dropped, and he grew pale. "I had dreamed of nothing as wild as this," he blurted out, "with no thought or wish to sugar the truth. I feared a young man's rashness. I dreaded scandal. But, forgive me, your majesty. For you a morganatic marriage would be madness."

"A morganatic marriage I did think of at first, but on second thoughts I saw it would be ungrateful."

"Ah, yes, to the country which expects so much of you."

"No, to the woman who has the right to all or nothing. I will make her empress of Rheata."

With a cry the chancellor sprang up. His eyes glared like the eyes of a bull who receives the death stroke. His writhing lips and the hollow sound in his throat alarmed the emperor.

"No, your majesty, no!" he panted.

"Did I say yes," Leopold answered, "and let no man give me any. I've thought it all out. I will make her my empress."

"Take care, chancellor!"

"She has been deceiving you. She has neither the birth, the position nor the name she claims to have, and I can prove it."

"You are mad, Von Breitslein," the emperor flung at him. "That can be your only excuse for such words."

But your majesty, I am old and wise, your majesty. For you have made me feel that I am very old. Pardon me as you will for my frankness. I speak for you and yours is nearly done. Cheerfully will I submit my will to your disposal if only this last effort in your service may save the state from wreck. I would not make an accusation which I could not prove. And I can prove that the two English ladies who have been staying at Schloss Lyndenberg are not the persons that you wish to be."

"Who has been lying to you?" cried Leopold, who held between clenched hands the tumbler he vowed not to touch with this old man.

"To me, no one. To your majesty, to society in Kronburg, two adventures have lied."

The emperor caught his breath. "If you were a young man I would kill you for that," he said.

"I know you would. As it is my life is yours. But before you take it for God's sake, for your father's sake, hear me out."

Leopold did not speak for a moment, but stared at the vanishing landscape, which he saw through a red haze.

"Very well," he said at last; "I will hear you, because I fear nothing you can say."

"When I heard of your majesty's admiration for a certain lady, the chancellor began quickly lest the emperor should change his mind. I looked for her name and her mother's in Burke's Peerage. There I found Lady Mowbray, widow of a dead baron of that ilk, mother of a son still a child and of one daughter, a young woman with many names and twenty-eight years."

"This surprised me, as the Miss Mowbray I had seen at the birthday ball looked no more than eighteen and I was told, confessed to twenty."

"The Mowbrays, I learned by a little further research in Burke, were distantly connected by marriage with the family of Baumenburg-Drippe. This seemed an odd coincidence in the circumstances. But acting duty before me, I wired to two persons—Baron von Sark, your majesty's ambassador to Great Britain, and the crown prince of Hungary, the brother of Princess Virginia."

"What did you telegraph?" asked the emperor.

"Nothing compromising to your majesty, you may well believe. I inquired of Adalbert if he had English relations, a Lady Mowbray and daughter, Helen, traveling in Rheata, and I begged that if so he would describe their appearance by telegram. To Von Sark I said that particulars by wire concerning the widow of Lord Mowbray and daughter, Helen, would not be under personal obligation. Both these messages I sent off right before last. Yesterday I received Adalbert's answer, this morning Von Sark's. They were here."

The old man unbent his coat and produced a coroneted pocketbook, a souvenir of friendship on his last birthday from the emperor. Leopold saw it and remembered, as the chancellor hoped he would.

"Here are the telegrams, your majesty," he said. "The first one is from the crown prince of Hungary."

"Have no idea where Lady Mowbray and daughter are traveling; may be Rheata or north pole," Adalbert had written, with characteristic diffidence.

"Have seen neither for eight years and scarcely know them. But Lady Mowbray, I'll brown old party, with nose like hyacinth; Helen dark, nose like mother's, wears glasses."

With no betrayal of feeling, Leopold laid the telegram on the red plush seat and unfolded the other.

"Pardon delay," the Rheata ambassador's message began. "Have been making inquiries. Lady Mowbray has been widow for years. Not rich. During son's minority has let her town and country houses. Lived much abroad. Very high church. Intellectual, at present in Chichester, where daughter Helen, twenty-eight, not pretty, is lately engaged to marry middle-aged judge of some distinction."

"So," and the emperor threw aside the second bit of paper—"It is on such slight grounds as these that a man of the world can label two ladies 'adventuresses.'"

The chancellor was bitterly disappointed. He had counted on the impression which these telegrams must make, and unless Leopold were acting it was now certain that love had driven him out of his senses.

But if the emperor were mad he must be treated accordingly, and the old statesman condescended to "bluff."

"There is still more to tell," he said, "if your majesty has not heard enough, but I think when you have reflected you will not wish for more. It is clear that the woman calling themselves Mowbrays have had the audacity to present themselves here under false colors. They have either deceived Lady Lambert, who introduced them to Rheata society, or still more likely, they have cleverly forged their letters of introduction."

"Why didn't you telegraph to Lady Lambert what your hand was in?" sneered Leopold.

"I did, your majesty, or, rather, not knowing her present address, I wired a friend of mine, an acquaintance of hers, begging him to make inquiries without using my name, but I have not yet received an answer to that telegram."

"Until you do I should think that even a cynic like yourself might give two defenseless, inoffensive ladies the benefit of the doubt."

"Inoffensive," echoed Von Breitslein. "Inoffensive when they came to this country to ensnare your majesty through the girl's beauty! But, great heaven, it is true that I am growing old! I have gone so far as to mention the word marriage to Miss Mowbray?"

"It is a question that question by another. Do you really believe that Miss Mowbray came to Rheata to 'entrap' me?"

"I do, though I scarcely think that even her ambition goes as high as you are accusing her of."

"In case you're right she would have been overjoyed with an offer of morganatic marriage."

"Oversold her to poor word. Overwhelmed might be nearer."

"Yet I tell you she refused me last night and is leaving Rheata today. I shall then listen to further communications."

NEVER LEAK

What never leak? Exactly; never leak, never needs repairs of any kind, and last as long as the building itself. Neither melting snow, nor the worst driving rain can possibly reach the interior of the building that's covered with Cortright Metal Shingles. Pretty good recommendation isn't it? In addition we might add they're fire-proof and lightning proof too. Think of it and they are not as expensive as other kinds of roofing. Step in and we'll show them to you.

MR. BRYAN'S OPINIONS

The plan of guaranteed bank deposits has probably found favor, among all classes of people and irrespective of political affiliation, more rapidly than any other public question.

The new state of Oklahoma has already enacted a law taxing state banks, the fund thus accumulated to be used in paying the depositors of any state bank that from any cause becomes unable to meet its obligations. A special session of the Kansas legislature has been called for the purpose of enacting legislation similar to the Oklahoma plan. The governor of Nebraska is considering the advisability of calling a special session of the legislature on account of the growing belief among the people that protection to bank depositors in the form of state or federal guarantees of their deposits will stop the hoarding of money, bring into circulation sufficient currency to conduct the business of the country, and prevent a recurrence of such disastrous panics as the one through which we are now passing.

Mr. Bryan has been an advocate of a law guaranteeing deposits in state and national banks since 1893. Mr. Bryan, in discussing the tariff questions, insists that residents of the United States should be permitted to buy home-made goods at home at as low a price as the foreigner can buy American-made goods abroad. He also insists that our government should be by and for the people as a whole, rather than by and for the trusts, and administered in the interest of a few beneficiaries of the trust system. He believes that national legislation for the purpose of better regulation and control of interstate commerce and common carriers should supplement state legislation, and not be a substitute for state legislation.

Mr. Bryan's paper, The Commoner, reflects his opinions each week on questions of public importance and in its columns may also be found his magazine articles, public speeches, addresses and lectures, which are referred to in the daily press from day to day.

If you are interested in political questions, if you desire to keep in touch with the progress of the campaign and to read Mr. Bryan's campaign speeches send sixty cents to The Commoner, and the paper will be sent to you each week until the close of the next presidential campaign.

Postoffice money order, currency or stamps will be accepted. Only sixty cents. Address The Commoner, Lincoln, Neb.

SOUTH'S BIGGEST HORSE SHOW AT FAIR.

Management Will Take Steps to Place Tennessees in Lead as Horse State.

Nashville, April 15.—The breeding and raising of fine horses in Tennessee will receive a big boost from now at the hands of the Tennessee State Fair Association. At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee it was decided to spare no effort or money to have the biggest horse show in the South during all six nights of the Fair, in September. A very attractive list of premiums will be offered, so as to bring the best horses in the country, but particular attention will be paid to horses owned in Tennessee. The State Fair Association will furnish the money necessary to make the show a success and the arrangement of the details will be in the hands of a committee of fifty, half of which will be ladies.

The prime object of this show is to encourage a revival in interest in horse-flesh in the state, but it will also prove one of the most attractive features of the Fair.

It is hoped that as a result of the show's influence the people of Tennessee will again take their old interest in horse-flesh and will place the state in a position as the foremost horse-raising state in the Union. With the natural resources at hand there is no evident reason why this ambition of the Fair management should not be realized.

Leopold bent forward to launch this thunderbolt, his brown hands on his knees, his feet crossed. The memories half bitter, half sweet, called up by his own words caused Virginia to appear more beautiful, more desirable, ever than before.

He was delighted with the expression of the chancellor's face. "Now, what arguments have you left?" he broke out in the brief silence.

"All I can tell you, and many new ones, for what your majesty has said shows the lady more ambitious, more astute, therefore more dangerous, than I had guessed. She stalked everything on the power of her charms, and she might have won had you not an old servant who wouldn't be fooled by the witchery of a fair Heien."

"She has won," said Leopold, then quickly: "God forgive me for chiming in with your bitter humor, as if she'd played a game. By simply being herself she has won me, such as I am. She's proved that if she cares at all it's for the man and not the emperor, since she called the offer you think so magnificent an insult. Yes, chancellor, for that was the word she used, and it was almost the last she said to me, which is the reason I'm traveling today. And none of your boasted 'proofs' can hold me back!"

"By heaven, your majesty must look upon yourself from the point of view you credit to the girl! You forget the emperor in the man!"

"The two need not be separated."

"Love indeed makes men blind and spares not the eyes of emperors."

"I've pledged myself to bear with you, chancellor."

"Add I know you'll keep your word. I must speak for Rheita and your better self. You are following blindly to give her your empire for a toy."

"She must first accept the emperor as her husband."

"A lady who has so poor a name of her own that she steals one which doesn't belong to her—the nation won't bear it."

"You speak for yourself, not for Rheita," said Leopold. "Though I'm not so old as you by half your years, I believe I can judge my people better than you do. The law which bids an emperor of Rhinea match with royalty is an unwritten law, a law solely of customs handed down through the generations. I'll not spoil my life by submitting to its yoke, since by breaking it the nation gains, as I do. I could go to the world's end and not find a woman as worthy to be my wife and empress of Rhinea as Helen Mowbray."

"You have never seen Princess Virginia."

"I've no wish to see her. There's but one woman for me, and I swear to you if I lose her I'll go to my grave unmarried. Let the crown fall to my uncle's son. I'll not perjure myself over a girl I have never seen."

The chancellor bowed his head and held up his hands, for by that gesture alone could he express his despair. "If my people love me, they'll love my wife and rejoice in my happiness," Leopold went on sharply. "If they complain, why, shall we see whose master—whether or not the emperor of Rhinea—is more loved. In some countries royalty is but an ornamental survival of a picturesque past; a king or queen is a mere puppet which the nation leads and which is too inert to itself. Honor. That's not true of Rhinea, though, as I'm ready to prove, if I prove it I must. But I believe I shall be spared the trouble. We Rhineans love romance—you are perhaps the one exception—while, as for the story you've told me, I would not give that for it!"

And the emperor snapped his fingers.

"You still believe the ladies have a right to the name of Mowbray?"

"I believe that they are of stainless reputation and that any seeming mystery can be explained. Miss Mowbray is herself. That's enough for me. Perhaps, chancellor, there are two Lady Mowbrays."

"Only one is mentioned in Burke."

"Burke isn't gospel."

"Tardon me. It's the gospel of the British people. It can no more be guilty of error than Euclid."

"Nor can Miss Mowbray be guilty of wrong. I should still stake my life on that even had your conclusions not been lame ones."

The old man accepted this rebuff in silence. But it was not the silence of absolute hopelessness; it was only such a pause as a prize fighter makes between rounds.

"Your majesty will not be in too great haste, at all events, I trust," he said at last—"at least a little reflection, a little patience, to cool the blood. I have not laid down all my cards yet."

"It's often bad policy not to lead troops," replied Leopold.

"Often, but not always. Time and the end of the play will show. Is your majesty's indulgence for the old man quite exhausted?"

"Not quite, though rather strained, I confess," Leopold tempered his words with a faint smile.

hope to find Lady Mowbray and her daughter."

"Then, your majesty, when I've expressed my gratitude for your forbearance, even though I've failed to be convincing, I'll trouble you no longer."

The chancellor rose painfully, with a reminiscence of gout, and Leopold stared at him in surprise. "What do you mean?" he asked.

"Only that, as I can do no further good here, with your permission I will get out at the station where you are coming to and go back home again."

The emperor realized what he had not noticed at this moment—that the train was slackening speed as it approached the suburbs of a town. His conversation with the chancellor had lasted for an hour, and he was far from regretting the prospect of being left in peace. More than once he had become seriously near to losing his temper, forgetting his gratitude and the old man's years. But he knew he could have held out under a continued strain of provocation he did not know. So he spoke so word of discussion when Count von Reinitz picked him up, so he had not buttoned his gray coat to his departure.

"I've passed pleasant hours in your society, I admit," said Leopold when the train started. "But I can thank you for your motives, if not your maxims, and here's my hand."

"It would be most kind of your majesty to telephone me from Feigard," the chancellor exclaimed, as if on a sudden thought, while they shook hands, "merely to say whether you remain there or whether you return at once. I am too fatigued to travel back immediately to Schloss Breitenstein and shall rest for some hours at least in my house at Kronberg, so a call will find me there."

"I will do as you ask," said the emperor. Again he pressed the chancellor's hand, and it was very cold.

IT SAVED MY LIFE—WRITES ECZEMA PATIENT.

Bed-ridden Sufferer Completely Cured by Use of D. D. External Wash.

One of the most remarkable Eczema cures recently credited to the well known D. D. Prescription has just been recorded in Chicago.

Mrs. E. Hegg, 1550 West Madison street, under date of Dec. 9, 1907, writes as follows:

"I suffered three years with Weeping Eczema. It started with a little spot on my knees and spread fast over my whole body. I spent hundreds of dollars and got every good doctor I heard of, but kept getting worse. Nothing would stop the awful itch and burning."

"I had to stay in bed from the middle of May to the middle of July. Then I tried D. D. Prescription. This is the 9th of December and I am entirely free from the terrible disease. D. D. D. saved my life."

"When I began this treatment, people were afraid of me; I looked so terrible. My husband was the only one who would take care of me. D. D. D. stopped the itch at once so I could sleep, which I had not done before. Then I began to get better fast and now my skin is clear and white, not a speck anywhere."

Just a few drops of D. D. Prescription applied to the skin brings relief—nothing to swallow or drink. We vouch for D. D. D. Prescription, also the cleansing D. D. D. Soap, R. C. Hardwick, Hopkinsville, Ky. Get a bottle today if you have any skin disease. Begin your cure at once.

BUSINESS TALK

From Clark's Big City Market House,

The place for you to buy your groceries; we buy all of our heavy groceries in car load lots; buy for 2 Big stores and having been in this business for the period of 20 years certainly means that we have a decided advantage, in getting on the right side of the market.

It is our intention of making Hopkinsville one of the best grocery markets in Western Kentucky; no use of going to other markets for bargains, come and let us trade together, build up your home town. We have been buying more produce from the farmers for the past 10 years than any other concern in this city.

Ten years ago a wagon load of SPRING CHICKENS would stock this market, today there is a market for every one you bring, it can't be over stocked. Ten years ago EGGS sold here as low as 5 cents a dozen, for the past 3 or 4 years the market has never been less than 10 cents and they have even been sold all through the summer time at 15 cents.

We have great faith in the future of this city, we have the best county in the state of Kentucky, the best people; nature has supplied us with all natural sources that the heart could wish for, we can raise a diversity of crops, never know what a failure is in all our crops.

Hopkinsville, the county seat of this great county, has more energetic hustling merchants, than any other city in Kentucky. The larger this city grows the more it enhances the value of all farm property.

Six years ago we commenced to try and rebuild our business having passed through all kinds of adversity; commenced without money but with lots of nerve and unbending energy, having confidence that our many friends would stick to us, and it has far exceeded our expectation, from a business 6 years ago of about $1,000 a month we are now doing a business of nearly Ten Thousand Dollars a month. For all of which we want to thank one and all.

We Shall Do All in Our Power to Please You, at All Times.
